Description

Project is aimed at supplying of drinking water for local people in the Kajiado District, Rift Valley, Kenya. The region lies in arid area settled mostly by local Massai people. The project activities envisage the drilling and equipping of one deep water well (up to 170 m) and transport of this water to the locals and their cattle. It is expected that the borehole will be situated several kilometres from the site of use. An underground water pipeline will be built up between the borehole and take-off site. Three small concrete constructions will be built-up within the project as well. These include shelter for pump, generator of alternating current and other technology, water tank and watering place for cattle.
