Description

The main objective of the project is to promote the fair and sustainable development of the Republic of Kenya through agricultural interventions. The aim of the project is to support processes that will lead to a substantial increase in the production of macadamia nuts for the local and world markets. The project aims to increase both the volume and quality of this crop. The tool for achieving results will be financial investment in macadamia integrifolia seedlings of great quality and effective cultivation practices. By implementing these two key components contractor with its local partner will create a solid foundation for the future significant development of macadamia nut production. The actual impact of the project and its implemented activities will be clearly visible after the end of the project. The project has an investment character with a clearly foreseeable outcome, which is the fulfillment of the Kenyan potential for a significant increase in the production of macadamia nuts and thus the increase in the Kenyan economy. The project will create three nurseries of quality macadamia seedlings and will give access to healthy and quality seedlings to 10,000 growers and farmers. Breeders do not have sufficient knowledge of proper agricultural care for trees of this type and therefore part of the project is an ambition to train them in correct cultivation skills, techniques and practices, in accordance with Fair Trade and Organic criteria. Based on the training and auditing, the Fair Trade and Organic certificates will be awarded to the beneficiaries of the project. The possibility of introducing a quality agricultural certified crop on its own farms will be a permanent improvement in the income situation for 10,000 growers and their families. Macadamia nuts are a popular market product for the taste and variety of use - whether for direct consumption or further processing, such as macadamia oil, used in addition to the food industry and cosmetics.
